A Word from Bishop Medley

Editor's note: On Aug. 16, 2018, Bishop Medley released the below statement in response to the current situation affecting the Catholic Church in the United States. He requested that this statement be run in the September 2018 issue of The Western Kentucky Catholic in place of his regular column.

Sin is real. In our own lives and in our contemporary society we may strive to find another word, another way, to portray the willful disdain for God and God's ways. Maybe a word with a little less sting. But sin is real.

I find myself addressing again the embarrassing and shameful reality that the sin of sexual abuse is still being discovered among bishops and priests. It has been sixteen years since the Catholic Church of the United States publicly acknowledged that far too many priests for far too long had acted as sexual predators and harmed young people. In 2002 the bishops of the United States adopted The Charter for the Protection of Children and Young People in the wake of revelations that hundreds of priests across the country had preyed upon thousands of children and youth. The pledge of the Catholic Church at that time was "promise to protect, pledge to heal." This pledge came about primarily because of the incredible faith and courage of those who had been victims of abuse by priests. Painful as these revelations have been, the victims' courage called the Church to contrition and healing. These encounters have not always been the Church's finest moments. Ongoing revelations from the State of Pennsylvania and the reported immoral behavior of an American cardinal underscore that the work is not complete.

To protect the vulnerable the Catholic Church set in place safe environment guidelines that sought to make any Catholic church, school or institution the safest place imaginable for young people. And this has worked well. Since 2002 there are reported each year fewer instances of children sexually exploited in the care of the Church and her priests, teachers, ministers, employees and volunteers. We are dealing with the brokenness of humanity, but even one instance in the entire country is abominable. I would have liked to suggest that the exposure of the sins of the Church have proven to make children safer across all of society, but I am not at all sure that the evidence would support such a finding. I also would have wished to report that even these rarer instances of abuse within the Church have not ever happened in the diocese of Owensboro. But they have. We continue to strive to respond promptly to any concerns and have acted to remove abusers from any positions of responsibility and authority.

The promise to heal is a promise to continue to

To report suspected abuse call the Kentucky Child Protection Hot Line: 1-877-KYSAFE1 or 1-877-597-2331 (Toll Free) or contact your local Commonwealth Attorney. To report abuse to the diocese, current or past, by anyone acting in the name of the Church, please call: 270-852-8380 to speak with the Pastoral Assistance Coordinator. You may also visit the Office of Safe Environment (owensborodiocese. org/safe) for more information.

invite victims to come forward and allow the Church to provide support, counseling and comfort. This promise is fulfilled first when victims speak about their exploitation and know they will be treated with respect and dignity. The Diocese of Owensboro stands ready to offer assistance to victims to find healing and peace, no matter how long ago that abuse may have taken place.

I invite all people to join me in prayer for anyone wounded and hurting. In our faith we do believe that Jesus Christ is a healer and looks kindly on those who have been harmed.

Humbling' Sophia Awards to celebrate 20 years of honoring wisdom

BY ELIZABETH WONG BARNSTEAD THE WESTERN KENTUCKY CATHOLIC

Ginny Knight-Simon has countless stories of the people she encountered during her role as director of the Diocese of Owensboro's Office of Wisdom.

But one story sticks out to her as particularly poignant.

"One person received the nomination for a Sophia Award," remembers Knight-Simon, adding that sadly, the woman was on her deathbed on the day of the awards Mass and ceremony.

The woman's family was present at the Mass to receive the award in her stead. But they also approached Knight-Simon after Mass and asked if she would personally go and present the woman with the award.

Of course, said Knight-Simon.

"She was so happy," said Knight-Simon in an Aug. 8, 2018 interview with The Western Kentucky Catholic. "She said, 'I got to see my award."

Knight-Simon sat and talked with the woman for a long time.

Before Knight-Simon said good-bye, the woman asked her to place the award on a shelf at the foot of her bed so the woman could see it as she lay there.

The woman passed away shortly after Knight-Simon left.

"She was waiting to see that award," Knight-Simon realized.

This year, the beloved tradition of the Diocese of Owensboro's Sophia Awards hits 20 years. The annual Mass, where the awards are given by Bishop William F. Medley, will be held this year on Sept. 9, 2018 at 2 p.m.

Those eligible for Sophia Awards are anyone 65 or older who have not previously received a Sophia Award, and who lead lives of stewardship - giving of their time, talent and treasure. People can be nominated on past outstanding contributions and can be homebound. Recipients have included married couples, single people, priests and religious. Posthumous nominations are also accepted.

Cathy Hagan is the administrative assistant in the diocese's Office of Stewardship, and oversees and organizes the Sophia Awards nominations and Mass. She took on the role when Knight-Simon retired in 2012.

"From the beginning it was a success," said Hagan in an Aug. 1, 2018 WKC interview, crediting Knight-Simon's "outgoing, talented" personality.

In 1999, the United Nations declared it to be the International Year of Older Persons. That same year, said Hagan, Pope St. John Paul II issued a Letter to the Elderly.

This was one of the inspirations for the diocese's establishing an Office of Wisdom, which for many years hosted bus trips and "Wisdom Days" of formation for older people. Today's Sophia Awards -"sophia" means "wisdom" in Greek - grew out of this initiative.

MEL HOWARD | WKC Bishop John J. McRaith gives the Sophia Award to Bob and Sharrie Cinnamond of Whitesville on Sept. 16, 2007.

"When you get old you feel like your ideas are dismissed because you're old," Knight-Simon told the WKC. "This is a good opportunity for the diocese and the parishes to honor their elders."

Every spring, Hagan sends out requests for Sophia nominations in order to prepare for the awards in the fall.

Letters are then mailed out from the Office of Stewardship notifying the nominees, and include a card on which they can mark "accept" or "decline to accept."

Occasionally, people decline the award, insisting "I'm not deserving," said Hagan, who will sometimes call the nominees personally to tell them, "but you are."

"They don't realize it's their very presence in their community" that makes them worthy of the Sophia Award, said Hagan. "It's not what you've done; it's who you are and how you live your faith."

Nominees may attend the Sophia Awards Mass and receive the award in person from Bishop Medley, but it is not required.

"If they can't make it to the Mass, we can send it and their pastor makes sure they get it," said Hagan. She said that including the 2018 Sophia Awards recipients, a total of 1,178 awards have been given over the past 20 years. This includes many married couples, who jointly received the award.

It is also a gift that keeps on giving.

"Those who are nominated and receive the award are more likely to nominate someone else to receive it," said Hagan.

Hagan said the Sophia Awards are a "favorite" part of what she does in the diocese.

"Just the joy on their faces," said Hagan. "The recognition that they have made a difference and that someone is finally seeing the good works and the wisdom they have shared with their parish, is humbling."

St. Jerome's parish picnic provides more than politics

On Aug. 4, 2018, crowds flocked to the far west end of Kentucky for St. Jerome Parish Picnic's famous barbeque and slightly more infamous political speeches.

But for all of the media attention given to the afternoon politics - which only lasted a few hours

- the annual event in Fancy Farm remained what it has for the past 138 years: a parish picnic.

"It started not as a political thing but as a family get-together," said Denis Wilson, a parishioner and member of a committee dedicated to preserving the St. Jerome School and Museum.

He spoke to The Western Kentucky Catholic on Aug. 4 while standing in the basement of the school-turned-museum, where he had been showing visitors various items on display from Fancy Farm history.

Wilson explained that like many parish picnics, "generations of families" put together the different aspects of the picnic, from cooking meat to baking desserts to selling food.

However, St. Jerome is unlike many other parishes, which were established to serve a preexisting community.

In the case of Fancy Farm, "the community grew up around the parish," said Wilson of the region, which remains predominantly Catholic.

For Wilson, the community, the parish and the picnic share a consistent theme: "It's truly homegrown; my wife brought four pies in!" he said.

Russell Ellegood, keeping an eye on the smoked meat on the barbeque pits, told the WKC that the total amount of meat cooked that day would total more than 18,000 pounds. He said he has been doing this "for as long as I can remember."

Ellegood explained that before the meat is placed on the pits (around 8 a.m. on Friday), St. Jerome's pastor, Fr. Darrell Venters, celebrates Mass, "then blesses the meat."

If that is not indicative enough of a Catholic event, there's also the tradition of the Diocese of Owensboro's current bishop offering a prayer before the start of the political speeches.

"I have seen people come from other counties, and from other countries," said Ellegood, explaining that besides welcoming curious visitors, the picnic also serves as a homecoming for Fancy Farm natives who have since moved away.

He reflected on the question of whether to call it the "St. Jerome Picnic" or the "Fancy Farm Picnic," noting that the terms are nearly synonymous: "If you ask people where you go (to church), you say Fancy Farm."

Ellegood said the community feel of the picnic is catching, which includes non-Catholics volunteering as well. When new people move to the area, they inevitably get involved with the picnic.

"Everybody pitches in," he said. "It's just community." ■

Kentucky school example of embracing the different, loving one's neighbor

She's a member of the social studies and language arts academic team and said her mom volunteers in the school's cafeteria and during used book sales. "I'm happy that they brought me here," she said describing her parents' move from Des Moines, Iowa. "I like that it's not really big and it's quiet around here."

HENDERSON, Kentucky (CNS) — When it comes to sizable Hispanic populations, Henderson isn't Los Angeles or New York City.

Nestled in the western part of the Bluegrass State, the Ohio River faithfully meanders by smooth fields of corn, soybean and patches of woods. Its most famous resident is naturalist and artist John James Audubon.

"Coming to Henderson, that's where I learned I was Latino!" Abraham Brown, director of Latino ministry for Holy Name of Jesus Catholic Church, jokingly said about moving from the Lone Star State. "Because down there in Texas everybody looked just like me, spoke just like me. So, coming here was a challenge at the beginning."

Brown moved to Henderson 15 years ago to work for a denim company. But when it closed, the Catholic parish, which is part of the Diocese of Owensboro, asked him to help with the growing Latino community.

Now he works with Latinos from 13 countries, and has seen the Spanish Mass turnout increase from 20 to 30 per week to 100 to 150, he said.

"We do have a very proactive approach for integration," Brown told Catholic News Service. "Not just assimilating but actually sharing of their own values and culture (through dance, food and worship) with our community."

Father Anthony Shonis, associate pastor at Holy Name of Jesus, credits the late Owensboro Bishop John J. McRaith for helping this assimilation.

"Toward the end of the 1980s, you might start seeing Hispanics at the Dairy Queen or Walmart," the bilingual pastor told CNS while sitting in the rectory dining room. "Bishop McRaith (during that time) sought funding and wrote grants so that all priests where Spanish was spoken had an 'ayudante."

An "ayudante" is a bilingual helper who is respected in both the Hispanic and Anglo community that helps migrants meet both their parish and well-being needs. "They're a bridge builder," Shonis said. "This person is worth their weight in gold."

Brown, Shonis' "bridge builder" says the Latino population in western Kentucky, southern Indiana and southern Illinois has doubled in the past five years. "A lot of people say that, 'Oh, it's just because there are a lot of job opportunities.' But job opportunities without a welcoming spirit, it (integration) doesn't work."

One place where it has worked is the school. Situated near a barbershop and about a block-and-a-half from the steeple, the downtown school has native Spanish speakers in every grade.

And Susana Solorza is the ladle that stirs the vernacular melting pot. The El Paso, Texas, native said she's the only K-8 Spanish teacher in the district, and if her seventh and eighth grade students earn B-averages for both years, they'll rake in a "Spanish I" high school credit.

"What I'm trying to do is shake the stereotypes Caucasians have of Latinos by speaking to them in English and letting them hear me speak Spanish to other students," she said describing part of her teaching technique. "By being their teacher, letting them get to know me through music, (food) and talk about my family (which helps break the stereotypes)."

For her Hispanic students, she shows them there's a teacher like them and brings some normal-cy to what is different about them. "I think having a teacher to fill that cultural gap, the linguistic gap, is very important because our families are here, and they want to be involved, and they try to be involved, and they want to see their students succeed," Solorza told CNS.

"Probably something that the Hispanic community has added most to our school is the diversity and knowing that just because someone is different doesn't mean they're weird," Scottie Koonce, principal at Holy Name of Jesus Catholic School said describing how students sometimes view life. "And probably the thing Hispanics have added to our community is that they've taught the kids that Catholicism isn't local, it's global."

Koonce went on to describe how the students love acknowledging the Latino celebrations of the Day of the Dead and Las Posadas. "I feel like our kids are starting to understand each other better, and that's really where it starts - because if the kids start understanding each other better and respect each other it carries over to the adults."

"Pope Francis has said, 'You have to take risks and go across barriers,'" Shonis said describing wide city streets and railroad tracks. "This effort of going to the other side can never end. And this is the foundation of Catholic schools, to bring minorities into the mainstream."

Richard Powers who had arranged to have it sent to Christ the King Church in a poverty-stricken area of Haiti.

Embracing those who suffer a miscarriage

New volunteer-driven ministry offers support, resources

BY DANNY MAY, SPECIAL TO THE WESTERN KENTUCKY CATHOLIC

The pain of suffering a miscarriage is difficult to navigate, especially if you don't have someone to talk with who has been through the experience before. Now, thanks to a caring group of volunteers, the Diocese of Owensboro has resources to offer those who are experiencing a miscarriage.

This new miscarriage ministry came about when a group of concerned moms who have all gone through miscarriages themselves contacted the Office of Marriage and Family Life with the idea to develop an informative brochure that would be distributed to all parishes in the Diocese. That same information is now available on the Marriage and Family Life webpage (owensborodiocese.org/office-of-marriage-family-life).

The brochure and webpage includes a concise overview of Church teaching on the subject, prayer suggestions, scripture references, and resources to help those dealing with loss.

Stephanie Carrico turned to friends with similar experiences to get the process started.

"Miscarriage is something people used to not talk about, but the lives of these babies deserve recognition," she said. "It's devastating to lose a child and parents need support."

Carrico says she felt much support from Natural Family Planning instructors and friends but realizes not all families have that network of support: "Creating a brochure for families with the knowledge we've gained from these experiences can help all those in our diocese to know what to do physically and spiritually during a miscarriage," she said.

Rachael Clark, who suffered a miscarriage in her first trimester, says she feels an "unspoken connection to other mothers who have experienced one as well. I was honored to be a part of creating this brochure because it is a way I could wrap my arms around a grieving or scared mother and walk with her through such a difficult process. Even though I can't physically help these moms, spiritually I feel this brochure is a way to remind women they aren't alone and their baby's lives, no matter how short, matter. They were created by God for a purpose."

Erin Jones was also glad to offer her input to hopefully help others: "After having to give your baby back to God after you've wanted this baby SO MUCH and loved this baby with all your heart, it's natural to feel some resentment and probably anger towards God. But thankfully, God loves us through it. I learned through firsthand experience that God draws the broken-hearted closest to Him."

In addition to the brochure and webpage, if someone suffering a miscarriage needs a listening ear and some accompaniment, they can contact the Office of Marriage and Family Life to be put in touch with this group of ladies who will be glad to offer support, understanding, compassion, and prayer.

According to Rachael Clark, "One of the hardest parts of miscarriage is that many times the parents are never able to hold their child. But this ministry reminds us that it is God who embraces both them and their unborn baby."

(Editor's note: The Office of Worship also has developed a resource designed for parents to help plan a memorial for their child who died before birth.)

Bishop Medley asks for assistance, prayers, for Kerala flood victims

BY ELIZABETH WONG BARNSTEAD THE WESTERK KENTUCKY CATHOLIC

The Diocese of Owensboro is taking strides to assist those suffering from the historic floods in Kerala state, India.

In an Aug. 21, 2018 letter sent to the priests of the diocese, Bishop William F. Medley spoke of the extreme flooding affecting southwest India.

"Most of the Heralds of Good News priests serving in our diocese come from this region of India, and the flooding is having a direct and devastating impact on their families and loved ones," wrote Bishop Medley.

The Heralds of Good News is a religious community of men, based out of India, which often sends missionary priests to dioceses experiencing a local vocations shortage. Currently, six "Heralds" priests are serving at parishes around the diocese.

In his letter, Bishop Medley said the situation in Kerala has been referred to as "the flood of the century," with hundreds of people dead and "more than a million individuals displaced and living in camps."

"The government of India estimates that the damage caused by the flooding and landslides will cost more than $1.1 billion U.S. dollars," wrote the bishop. "The loss of life and property is extensive and the human suffering profound."

He said homes have been swept away by the flooding, food and clean water are scarce, and people have lost all of their possessions apart from what they could carry to higher ground.

Bishop Medley said the Catholic Church in India – including the Heralds of Good News – have joined in relief efforts by opening parishes, schools and other Catholic institutions for displaced people.

The bishop asked that a special collection be held in the Diocese of Owensboro on the weekends of Aug. 25-26 or Sept. 1-2 to send to the Catholic Relief Services (CRS) representatives providing assistance in Wayanad District – one of the worst-hit regions.

Donations are not limited to those two weekends, however. People of the Diocese of Owensboro may continue sending money by writing checks to "Diocese of Owensboro" with "Kerala relief" written in the memo line. The diocese will then forward the contributions to the Heralds of Good News and CRS.

"I am asking that you inform the people of your parish of the tragedy happening in Kerala and of our direct connection through the Heralds of Good News serving among us here," wrote the bishop. "There is never a shortage of human need in our world. I pray that in this moment, when we observe the devastation of so many, we may all continue the rich Gospel tradition of responding to those in need."

Un Mensaje del Obispo Medley

Nota de la editora: el 16 de agosto de 2018, el Obispo Medley publicó la siguiente declaración en respuesta a la situación actual que afecta a la Iglesia Católica en los Estados Unidos. Pidió que esta declaración se publique en la edición de septiembre de 2018 del Católico de Kentucky Occidental en lugar de su carta regular.

Una declaración del Obispo William F. Medley

El pecado es real. En nuestras propias vidas y en nuestra sociedad contemporánea podemos esforzarnos por encontrar otra palabra, otra manera, para retratar el desprecio voluntario por Dios y por los caminos de Dios. Tal vez una palabra con un poco menos de impacto. Pero el pecado es real.

Me encuentro de nuevo frente a la perturbadora y vergonzosa realidad de que el pecado de abuso sexual aún se está descubriendo entre obispos y sacerdotes. Han pasado dieciséis años desde que la Iglesia Católica de los Estados Unidos reconoció públicamente que demasiados sacerdotes habían actuado durante demasiado tiempo como depredadores sexuales y habían lastimado a menores de edad. En el 2002, los obispos de los Estados Unidos adoptaron el Estatuto para la Protección de Niños y Jóvenes a raíz de las revelaciones de que cientos de sacerdotes en todo el país habían atacado a miles de niños y jóvenes. La promesa de la Iglesia Católica en ese momento era "promesa de proteger, compromiso para sanar". Esta promesa se produjo principalmente debido a la increíble fe y valentía de aquellos que habían sido víctimas de abuso por parte de los sacerdotes. Por dolorosas que hayan sido estas revelaciones, la valentía de las víctimas llamó a la Iglesia a la contrición y la sanación. Estos encuentros no siempre han sido los mejores momentos de la Iglesia. Las revelaciones que se están dando en el estado de Pennsylvania y el comportamiento inmoral alegado de un cardenal estadounidense subrayan que el trabajo no se ha completo.

Para proteger a los vulnerables, la Iglesia Católica estableció pautas de ambiente seguro que bus-

La Parroquia Santísima Trinidad en Morgantown tuvo su primera Escuela Bíblica de Vacaciones (VBS) del 30 de julio al 3 de agosto. La parroquia estaba agradecida con el Padre Michael O'Mara y su equipo - Teresa, Mark y un maravilloso grupo de jóvenes - de la Parroquia San Gabriel Arcángel en Indianápolis por venir y trabajar con los niños. Los niños, junto con los adultos, pasaron una semana llena de diversión en la que aprendieron sobre: "Servir a Dios - Amar a Dios - Amar al Prójimo - Servir a los demás - y Servir a nuestra Comunidad". La Santísima Trinidad espera con ansias el próximo verano para otra semana de la Escuela Bíblica de Vacaciones, que tratará sobre "Amar a Dios y Amar a Todos los Demás".

sus sacerdotes, maestros, ministros, empleados y voluntarios. Estamos lidiando con la humanidad quebrantada, pero incluso una sola instancia en todo el país es abominable. Me hubiera gustado sugerir que la exposición de los pecados de la Iglesia ha hecho que los niños estén más seguros en toda la sociedad, pero no estoy seguro para nada de que la evidencia respalde tal pensamiento. También hubiera deseado informar que incluso estos casos más raros de abuso dentro de la Iglesia no han sucedido en la diócesis de Owensboro. Pero sí han sucedido. Seguimos esforzándonos por responder con prontitud ante cualquier acusación o sospecha y hemos actuado en remover a los abusadores de cualquier posición de responsabilidad y autoridad.

La promesa de sanar es una promesa de continuar invitando a las víctimas a presentarse y permitir que la Iglesia brinde apoyo, asesoramiento y consuelo. Esta promesa se cumple primero cuando las víctimas hablan sobre su explotación y saben que serán tratadas con respeto y dignidad. La Diócesis de Owensboro está lista para ofrecer asistencia a las víctimas para encontrar la sanación y la paz, sin importar cuánto tiempo haya pasado desde ese abuso.

Invito a todas las personas a unirse a mí en oración por cualquier persona herida y adolorida. En nuestra fe creemos que Jesucristo es un sanador y mira con bondad a los que han sido heridos.

Tres sacerdotes hablarán sobre vocaciones en Vocare 2018

El P. Basilio Az Cuc sale de la catedral de San Esteban en Owensboro después de su Misa de Ordenación el 30 de mayo de 2016. P. Basilio será uno de los tres sacerdotes que hablará en Vocare el 14 de septiembre de 2018.

El 14 de septiembre de 2018, tres sacerdotes hablarán en el evento anual Vocare - un evento organizado por la Diócesis de Owensboro para recaudar fondos y celebrar las vocaciones al sacerdocio y la vida religiosa. Los tres sacerdotes son el Padre Basilio Az Cuc, vicario parroquial de Santos José y Pablo, Owensboro; el Padre John Thomas, párroco de la Parroquia Santo Espíritu, Bowling Green; y el Padre Richard Powers, un sacerdote jubilado de la diócesis que reside y asiste en las parroquias de Owensboro. Aquí hay una muestra de lo que hablarán en Vocare:

P. Basilio Az Cuc: "He sido sacerdote por dos años, y mucha gente dice que mi ministerio hace una diferencia en sus vidas, con Dios trabajando a través de mí."

P. John Thomas: "El sacerdocio muestra a una persona dispuesta a hacer un sacrificio, una persona dispuesta a tomar un riesgo y una persona dispuesta a amar. Necesitamos eso en nuestro mundo porque las cosas son tan materialistas, tan transitorias."

P. Richard Powers: "Para mí, las bendiciones más grandes de ser un sacerdote son - ¿qué más? - la Eucaristía y los sacramentos."

HENDERSON, Ky. (CNS) - Cuando se trata de grandes poblaciones hispanas, Henderson no es Los Ángeles o la ciudad de Nueva York.

Ubicado en la parte occidental de un estado conocido por su "pasto azul", el río Ohio serpentea fielmente por campos tranquilos de maíz, soya y pedazos de bosque. Su residente más famoso es el naturalista y artista John James Audubon.

"¡Al llegar a Henderson, aprendí que soy latino!" Abraham Brown, director del ministerio latino de la Iglesia Católica Santo Nombre de Jesús, dijo en broma acerca de mudarse del estado conocido como Estrella Solitaria. "Porque allá en Texas todo el mundo se parecía a mí, hablaba como yo. Entonces, venir aquí fue un desafío al principio".

Brown se mudó a Henderson hace 15 años para trabajar para una compañía de mezclilla. Pero cuando se cerró, la parroquia católica, la cual es parte de la Diócesis de Owensboro, le pidió ayuda con la creciente comunidad latina.

Ahora él trabaja con latinos de 13 países, y ha visto el aumento de la asistencia a la Misa en español desde 20 a 30 por semana hasta entre 100 y 150, dijo.

"Tenemos una estrategia muy proactiva para la integración," dijo Brown a Catholic News Service. "No simplemente nos asimilamos, sino que realmente compartimos nuestros propios valores y cultura (a través del baile, la comida y el culto) con nuestra comunidad."

El Padre Anthony Shonis, vicario parroquial de Santo Nombre de Jesús, le da crédito al difunto obispo de Owensboro, John J. McRaith, por ayudar a esta integración.

"En los finales de la década de 1980, comenzamos a ver a los hispanos en Dairy Queen o Walmart", dijo el vicario bilingüe a CNS mientras estaba sentado en el comedor de la rectoría. "El Obispo McRaith (durante ese tiempo) buscó fondos y dio becas para que todos los sacerdotes en los lugares donde se hablaba español tuvieran un 'ayudante'".

Un "ayudante" es una persona bilingüe, respetada tanto por la comunidad hispana como la comunidad angla que ayuda a los inmigrantes con sus necesidades tanto en la parroquia como de su bienestar. "Son gente puente," dijo el Padre Shonis. "Esta persona vale su peso en oro."

Brown, el "gente puente" del Padre Shonis, dice que la población latina en el oeste de Kentucky, el sur de Indiana y el sur de Illinois se ha duplicado en los últimos cinco años. "Mucha gente dice: 'Oh, es solo porque hay muchas oportunidades de trabajo.' Pero las oportunidades de trabajo sin un espíritu acogedor, esto (la integración) no funciona."

Un lugar donde ha funcionado es la escuela. Situada en el centro de la ciudad cerca de una barbería, y a una cuadra y media del campanario, la escuela tiene estudiantes en todos los grados cuya lengua materna es español.

Y Susana Solorza es la cuchara que mezcla el crisol coloquial. La originaria de El Paso, Texas, dijo que ella es la única maestra de español K-8 en el distrito, y si sus estudiantes de séptimo y octavo grados obtienen promedios de 'B-' para ambos años, obtendrán un crédito de la escuela preparatoria "Español I".

"Lo que estoy tratando de hacer es sacudir los estereotipos que las personas de raza caucasiana tienen de los latinos al hablarles en inglés y dejarles que me escuchen hablar en español a otros estudiantes," dijo describiendo parte de su técnica de enseñanza. "Siendo su maestra, dejándolos conocerme a través de la música (la comida) y hablar sobre mi familia (lo que ayuda a romper los estereotipos)."

Para sus estudiantes hispanos, les muestra que hay una maestra como ellos y le da cierta normalidad a lo que es distinto en ellos. "Creo que tener una maestra para llenar esa brecha cultural, la brecha lingüística, es muy importante porque nuestras familias están aquí, y quieren involucrarse, y tratan de involucrarse, y quieren ver a sus estudiantes tener éxito," Solorza le comentó a CNS.

Samantha Sofia Gonzales Rosales, estudiante de primer grado, posa para una foto el 29 de marzo en la Escuela Católica Santo Nombre de Jesús en Henderson, Ky. Ella dice que su hermana mayor aún vive en México porque le gusta allí. "Una vez pensó que íbamos a traerla aquí y ella dijo: '¡No quiero ir a Estados Unidos! ¡Quiero quedarme en México!'" Samantha dijo en broma.

"Algo que la comunidad hispana probablemente ha añadido más a nuestra escuela es la diversidad y saber que el hecho de que alguien sea distinto no significa que sea extraño," dijo Scottie Koonce, director de la Escuela Católica Santo Nombre de Jesús describiendo cómo a veces los estudiantes ven la vida. "Y lo que los hispanos probablemente han añadido a nuestra comunidad es enseñar a los niños que el catolicismo no es local, sino global."

Koonce continuó describiendo cómo a los estudiantes les encanta festejar las celebraciones latinas del Día de Muertos y Las Posadas. "Siento que nuestros

"El Papa Francisco ha dicho: Tienes que arriesgarte y traspasar las barreras," dijo el Padre Shonis al describir las calles anchas de la ciudad y las vías del tren. "Este esfuerzo de ir al otro lado nunca puede terminar. Y esta es la base de las escuelas católicas, llevar a las minorías a la cultura prevalente". ■

Choir camp returns to Mount Saint Joseph for ninth year

Members of the Institute of Christ the King Sovereign Priest Choir Camp, from the St. Francis De-Sales Oratory in St. Louis, returned to the Mount Saint Joseph Conference and Retreat Center the week of Aug. 6-10 for their ninth year of music camp. On Aug. 9, the members performed for the Ursuline Sisters in Saint Joseph Villa. Afterward, the students visited individually with the sisters in the audience. Youths from 9-18 can participate in the camp to learn church music, and members come from all over the country. The students perform their songs in Latin, after spending the week learning vocal technique. In this photo, Sr. Clarita Browning, OSU, (right), and Sr. Francis Louise Johnson, OSU, (left), tell these camp members how much they enjoyed their performance.

VBS at Holy Trinity

Holy Trinity Parish in Morgantown had their first-ever Vacation Bible School July 30 through Aug. 3. The parish was grateful to Fr. Michael O'Mara and his team – Teresa, Mark, and a wonderful group of young people – from St. Gabriel the Archangel Parish in Indianapolis for coming and working with the children. The kids, along with the adults, had a fun-filled week learning about: "Serving God - Loving God - Loving God - Loving Our Neighbors - Serving Others - and Serving our Community." Holy Trinity looks forward to next summer for another week of VBS, which will be about "Love God and Love Everybody Else."

'Making the mercy of God visible in the world'

Three priests to speak at fifth annual Vocare

WKC FILE (Left to right) Fr. Richard Powers, Fr. John M. Thomas and Fr. Basilio Az Cuc will speak at Vocare on Sept. 14, 2018.

BY ELIZABETH WONG BARNSTEAD THE WESTERN KENTUCKY CATHOLIC

Fr. Richard Powers, 85, remembers when his father was near the end of his life, homebound and could not get to Mass.

Bishop-at-the-time, Henry J. Soenneker, told Fr. Powers that he needed to celebrate weekly Mass at his parents' house so Fr. Powers' dad could fulfill his Sunday obligation.

Bishop Soenneker's reasoning was that the Powers family had given three sons to the priesthood – Aloysius and Bernard, in addition to Richard – and their father could at least have Mass celebrated in his home.

So Fr. Powers did.

Then one day, Fr. Power's father asked him to hear his confession. Fr. Powers was surprised that his own father would ask this of him, and said so.

"Well, you're a priest, aren't you?" his father had said, which settled the question.

Shortly after that, Fr. Powers' mother started going to him for confession, too.

Fr. Powers spoke highly of "the faith of my mom and dad," who were farmers and raised their 12 children in the Catholic faith.

Whenever one of the Powers children grew up and moved out, the family would get on their knees before their image of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, and they would pray together.

"My dad was a saint," Fr. Powers reflected in his Aug. 13 interview with The Western Kentucky Catholic.

Today Fr. Powers is a retired diocesan priest and lives in Owensboro where he frequently assists at local parishes. He, along with Fr. Basilio Az Cuc and Fr. John Thomas, will speak at the fifth annual Vocare gala on Sept. 14 at the Owensboro Convention Center in downtown Owensboro.

Vocare, which is Latin for "to call" is both a fundraiser and a celebration of vocations in the Diocese of Owensboro.

The annual event began in 2014 and helps raise funds for diocesan seminarian education, which the diocese covers to assist young men discerning the priesthood. Additionally, when a Diocese of Owensboro parishioner joins a religious community, a portion of the funds raised at Vocare is gifted to that community.

Vocare also serves as an opportunity for laypeople, clergy and religious alike to gather from all over western Kentucky in appreciation of the crucial role vocations play in the life of the Catholic Church.

"I've been a priest now for two years, and a lot of people say my ministry makes a difference in their lives, with God working through me," said Fr. Az Cuc, who at 37 is the youngest priest to speak at this year's Vocare.

Fr. Az Cuc is the associate pastor of SS. Joseph and Paul Parish in Owensboro. He told the WKC in an Aug. 10 interview that the priesthood "makes the presence of God and the mercy of God visible in the world."

Fr. Az Cuc said that when he began discerning the priesthood many years ago, "at first I thought it was my idea."

"Then I realized it was God who put it in my heart, and it was not up to me to dismiss it," he said.

Fr. John Thomas would agree.

"I believe this is what I was created to do," said Fr. Thomas, 52, who is the pastor of Holy Spirit Parish in Bowling Green. "I've said it many times, but, the proof of that is that I don't think there's anything else in my life that could draw upon the skills and talents that I possess."

Fr. Thomas, who spoke with the WKC on Aug. 8, said he enjoys being a priest, "and I still get excited about it after 25 years."

"The priesthood shows a person willing to sacrifice, a person willing to take a risk, and a person willing to love," he said. "We need that in our world because things are so materialistic, so transitional."

Fr. Thomas said that for every year he has been a priest, "I would absolutely do it all over again." ■

Young adults learn biblical roots of the Mass at Theology on Tap

ELIZABETH WONG BARNSTEAD | WKC

Approximately 60 young adults listen to Fr. Ken Geraci, CPM, speak about the Mass in the evening of Aug. 20, 2018.

BY WKC STAFF

"When you say that you're Catholic, you're not saying that you're one Christian denomination among many," said Fr. Ken Geraci, CPM, a Father of Mercy priest who spoke at Owensboro's Theology on Tap the evening of Aug. 20, 2018. "You're saying you're part of the universal covenant."

Fr. Geraci spoke to the approximately 60 young adults gathered at Fetta Specialty Pizza in downtown Owensboro, where he talked about the biblical roots of the Mass, as well as how to "pray" the Mass.

The crowd, which was originally seated in the restaurant's upstairs room, eventually had to be moved downstairs to the main floor of the restaurant due to large number of attendees. The outdoor seating was also opened up for more overflow.

Theology on Tap began in the Archdiocese of Chicago in 1981 as an initiative to reach Catholic young adults. The following decades saw the program spread across the United States as a way to offer young adult-relevant presentations about Catholicism in restaurants, bars and other public places. Since then, Theology on Tap has often become synonymous with young adult ministry, a growing movement in the Catholic Church to serve and reconnect with those from 18 years of age to those in their 30s.

Forty-four young adults gather for retreat day at Passionist monastery

BY WKC STAFF

On Saturday, July 28, 44 young adults from across western Kentucky gathered at St. Joseph Monastery in Whitesville for an all-day retreat geared specifically to their age group.

St. Joseph Monastery is the home of a community of cloistered Passionist nuns, whose charisms include providing a space and hospitality for lay, clergy and religious retreat.

The day included talks by Sr. Maria Faustina, CP, and Fr. Lou Caporiccio, CPM; individual reflection and prayer time, the opportunity to go to confession; small group discussions, and adoration with the nuns. Lunch and dinner were also provided to the retreat-goers.

For more information about young adult events within the diocese, visit owensborodiocese.org/young-adult-ministry or contact Charlie Hardesty, director of the diocesan Office of Youth and Young Adult Ministry, at charlie.hardesty@pastoral.org.

Communio

Why people are 'leaving Communion to find communion'

BY JOE BLAND, SPECIAL TO THE WESTERN KENTUCKY CATHOLIC

I had a young woman who was a member of our parish tell me right after she and her husband married that in the two years that they came to our parish, my wife and I were the only people ever to greet them. For full disclosure I knew this couple before they married and moved to our parish.

I am as guilty as anyone else in not greeting newcomers to our parish. But I bring up this story because this couple just wanted someone to recognize them and say hello, welcome to our parish, my name is...

It reminds me of the theme song for the old 1980's sitcom "Cheers." In the song it says, "Sometimes you want to go where everybody knows your name and they're always glad you came." Shouldn't that be our parishes? Shouldn't the parish be the place where everyone or at least someone knows your name and is glad to see you each week and knows when you aren't there?

Interestingly enough, the great St. Benedict wrote in his rule for monks, "All guests who present themselves are to be welcomed as Christ, for he himself will say: I was a stranger and you welcomed me (Matt. 25:35). Proper honor must be shown to all, especially to those who share our faith (Gal 6:10) and to pilgrims." Imagine if all of our parishes took this philosophy of hospitality, this philosophy of "communion" or community?

When you think about the word communion, what comes to mind? The Eucharist? Holy Communion?

At its root, communion or "communio" (Latin) is where we also get the word for community. It is believed that the word is derived from com = with or together + unus = oneness or union. So, when we come together around the Eucharistic Table we are in a "common union" or communion with one another. We share the Eucharist which we call Communion.

Living as Missionary Disciples

Fucounter

That communion is to not only bring Christ to us, body, blood, soul and divinity, but also it is there to bring us closer together as the Body of Christ.

But, as we know, some have left our table to go elsewhere.

In studies that I have read regarding people leaving the Catholic Church, there is a saying that keeps coming up: I was not being fed at the Catholic Church. When I first encountered this statement my reaction was, "What do you mean you weren't being fed? You were receiving the Eucharist; shouldn't that be enough?"

Then it came to me in prayer that they were "leaving Communion to go find communion." They were leaving the Church to go find community. They wanted to go where somebody knew their name, and was glad they came. Remember, we are a family not an organization.

Pope Francis tells us, "The Church is a family of families" (Amoris laetitia 87). When we lose sight of this we become a "social club," or a great charity organization, and that's not what the Church does. She evangelizes – that is what she is called to do. And part of evangelization is to walk with our fellow family members.

In his new Apostolic Exhortation, Pope Francis tells us, "A community that cherishes the little details of love, whose members care for one another and create an open and evangelizing environment, is a place where the risen Lord is present, sanctifying it in accordance with the Father's plan" (Gaudete et exsultate 145).

In this Year of Encounter may we seek out the stranger in our midst because it may be the Lord calling us to encounter Him. ■
